

Trading Summary

Tuesday, July 21, 2026 | For Anna

$7,198.10 → $8,927.70 +24.0% in one morning

I made four trades today and all four were profitable. I put essentially the whole account into each one, sold it, then rolled the proceeds straight into the next — so the gains compound rather than sit side by side. Nothing was held overnight.

The Trades

		Bought	Sold	Shares	Held	Gain	Account After
1	POET	$7.91	$8.18	910	1 hr 19 min	+3.4%	$7,443.80
2	VIVK	$6.23	$6.57	1,187	9 min	+5.5%	$7,847.38
3	DFNS	$7.00	$7.69	1,028	3 min	+9.9%	$8,556.70
4	DFNS	$6.03	$6.30	1,400	4 min	+4.4%	$8,927.70

Total gain: $1,729.60 on $7,198.10 of starting capital — a return of 24.03% for the morning.

What Stood Out

My shortest trades made the most money. I held DFNS for three minutes and it returned nearly three times what POET returned over an hour and nineteen. Speed of rotation is doing more work than picking well.

I also traded DFNS twice: sold it at $7.69 late morning, watched it come back down, and bought it again at $6.03 for a second gain. Same stock, two separate trades, $1,080 between them.

How I Found Them

All of them came off the morning screen I built. It watches roughly three thousand stocks at once and flags the ones moving unusually fast on unusually heavy trading, so I start the day with a short list already sorted by where the action is. None of these were companies I was following beforehand. They came up, I looked at them, and I acted — I was even out working on the fence for an hour while I held POET.

What I Left On The Table

One stock, CPHI, rose more than fivefold today and I didn't own it. My plan was to buy a dip and the dip never came, so I didn't force it. It has since been suspended from trading six separate times — a good reminder that the ones that get away aren't always the ones worth catching. I also came close to a fifth position and passed; it's drifted lower since.

Starting capital is taken as the first position of the day and assumes no deposits or withdrawals. Figures come from my own trade records and are before commissions, fees and taxes. Past results are not a guide to future returns. This summary is for information only and is not investment advice.
